NICKNAMES.

It seems strange, that, among the various subjects which have been chosen by authors for essays and other writings, nicknames should never have suggested itself. The custom of giving nicknames has been so universal, and in many instances attended with such important consequences, that an historical examination of the subject would be full of interest. An account of party names alone could be made very acceptable, and the PAMPHLETS. work completed by a mention of the names of those men, whose popularity or unpopularity have secured them such appellations. The word nickname, from the French nom de nique, meant originally a name of contempt or derision, and such is the definition always given; but the common use of the term as well as the want of any other, justify its also being applied to that class of names. which are indicative of love and popularity.

A few examples of party and personal nicknames will be given here, in order to illustrate the remarks above made. The name Protestants was first referred to those who protested against a resolve of the diet at Spires, POSITIVELY THE LAST WEEK OF held April 19, 1539, whereby any "further innovations in ecclesiastical affairs" were forbidden. This name, derived from a circumstance of no great importance and given to a party of small pretensions, now embraces under it the most powerful nations of the world. Other examples of party names are Dissenters, Covenanters, Round-heads, Cavaliers, Beggars, Whig, Tory, &c., au examination into any one of which would surpass the limits intended for the present article.

When we consider the nicknames of individuals, we are immediately struck with the fact that they are never given to any save the most popular or despised. A nickname seems to bring the person much nearer and to give an emphasis to the expression of love or hate. We draw him to us either to embrace him or smite him in the face. The soldier, particularly, delights in being able to make use of such familiar epithets when speaking of his commander, for he feels a INGTON, ON THURSDAY, the 24th instant. sort of brotherly affection towards the man under whom he has fought and bled. Napoleon was always spoken of as "Le Petit Corporal," a name bravely earned on the bridge of Lodi, and of which he as well as his men was justly proud. There is a story told of him, that one night while strolling around the camp be was challenged by the sentinel. He did not know the watchword, and the sentinel would not let him pass, saying-"if you were 'the Little Corporal' himself, you should not do it." Napoleon threw off his cloak and said, "I am the Little Cerporal." The soldier was promoted.

Marlborough-the invincible Marlborough -whose glory it was to have buffled a Government like that of France in the hands of ROUND TRIP TICKETS for grown persons a Louis XIV, also had a nickname. It was TWENTY-FIVE CENTS. For the Children ernment like that of France in the bands of "Corporal John." With him, however, it TWELVE CENTS was much more owing to his invariable success than to any personal popularity. He had none of that direct influence over his sol- Sabbath Schools. diers which Napoleon possessed in such a wonderful degree. He was too cold, too distant, too avaricious. Frederick the Great, of all commanders of modern times the most regardless of the lives of those who served him, was, nevertbeless, popular among his troops. He shared their dangers, and generally led them to glorious victories, and they had confidence in him. His nickname was Warfield, on Fairfax-street, or of either of the "Alter Frits," (Old Fred.) Blutcher, the gruff old soldier, was called "Marshal Vorwarts," (Marshal Forward.) Gensolvo de The BOAT will leave the Wharf at 8 Cordova was the "Great Captain." General Grey, afterwards Earl Grey, father of the Prime Minister was nicknamed "No Flint," (ABINET, CHAIR and SOFA MANU-FACTORY, No. 130, King street, Alexanbayonet. In our own history we have sev- handsomest and most sp under the name of "Old Hoss." Wellington had none, from perhaps, a similar reason.

As examples of nicknames given on account of unpopularity or in ridicule, the following suggest themselves: George II. was several patterns of Cottage Bedsteads, Hat-called "The Captain," George, III. "Farmer racks, Wardrobes, Looking Glasses, and a large The Earl of Mar was "Bobbing George." John," on account of his frequent changes between the Stuart and Hanover interests .-The Duke of Cumberland, who quelled the rebellion of 1745, was, from his cruelty, called "The Butcher." From these examples, collected together in the course of a few wecks' reading, it would seem that with la-bor the subject might be made one of inter-to 5, and from 75 to 9 o'clock, P. M. Annual est. It would require labor, but would amply repay the trouble it would cost.

It is a fact pregnant with importance that the name of a party is often one of the strongest links of the chain by which that party is kept together. It serves as a stimulant, driving on with an irresistible impulse towards a performance of those principles which it represents. Take for example the Gueux or Beggars of the Dutch Republic -Guided by the strong hand of the noble, selfsacrificing William of Orange, and bound together by the ties of fellow-feeling in the most commendable of struggles, the Beggars were always ready at the call of that name to rally in defence of their religion and their liberty. In our own country, who can doubt that there are thousands who vote at every Presidential election, and who are totally and confessedly inorant of the political creed of the candidate they support. Some of them may have swallowed down the words of a leader of their party, which to belch forth again on another occasion, but the on- many conveniences which our manufactory is ly thing which interests them, which is to provided with, to be able to make it the interest them more important than any political opin- of those wanting anything in our line, to give ions, and which often is the only inducement us a call. that brings them to the ballot-box is a party ap 30-16 to their names with a teracity truly astonishing, until other carses of difference arise, that he has opened a Depot No. 35 King street, and then that same name will be inscribed on the banger of the advocates of an entirely different principle. This is strikingly illustrated by the change which took place in the Whig and Tory parties in the course of the nics or excursions. In these cases the price will eighteenth century, each of them contending be less. Will open on Monday, May 31st. at the beginning of the nineteenth century | my 27-eo1m* for a cause in almost every respect the same as that for which their opponents had been struggling a bundred years before. resembles a Whig of Queen Anne's reign, and ity or price. Tory of Queen Anne's reign a modern Whig. "It is, therefore, a certain and a very curious fact, that the representative at this time of any great whig family, who probably imagines that he is treading in the focotsteps ANTHRACITE AND CUMBERLAND COAL of his forefathers, in reality, while adhering of the best quality, and at the very lowest prices, fulness on the part of those who have been atto their party name, is acting against almost every one of their party principles. * * * *

And in all the variations, the name is commonly the last thing that is changed; a remark which Paley makes of religion,* and which is equally true in politics."† Considered in these various lights the subject might, it seems to us, be made instructive by and entertaining. The object of this article will be satisfied if it serves to bring it into notice, or to call forth from abler pens other N.
